

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS

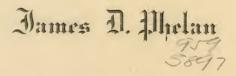

MICHAEL STRANGE

The Aniversity of California Library

1

ExLIBRIS

*

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS

÷

int. of California

MICHAEL STRANGE [photograph by arnold genthe]

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS

a share, the

By Michael Strange

NEW YORK MITCHELL KENNERLEY 1916

COPYRIGHT 1916 BY MITCHELL KENNERLEY

PHELAN

PRINTED IN AMERICA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

DACE

	TAGE
THE YOUTH AND HIS SOUL	3
THE RETURN OF YOUTH AND HIS SOUL	7
MOODS: I.	10
II.	II
III. REBELLION	12
IV.	14
V.	15
VI.	16
VII. "ENDING"	17
VIII.	18
IX. THE SPIRIT OF LOVE	19
X. THE SPIRIT OF LONELINESS	20
XI. THE SPIRIT OF SOUL	22
XII.	23
XIII.	24
XIV.	25
XV. "CONCESSION"	26
XVI. SUICIDE	28
XVII. RUN INTO THE FIELDS WITH ME	30
WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO HAVE LIVED?	31
A WOMAN PASSED ME	32
TO DEATH	34
IT IS A GLORIOUS MOMENT	35
WEARINESS	36
GRIEF	37
JANUARY MORNING	38

CONTENTS

	PAGE
DESPAIR	39
THOUGHTS AFTER AN HOUR SPENT IN A C. ARET	AB- 40
SLEEP	42
NEW YORK — ETCHED	43
QUATRAINS: I. TO XVII.	45
HUITAIN: I.	50
II. SADNESS	50
III.	51
SONNET	52
GOOD NIGHT	53
THOSE SINS	54
MADONNA OF THE EYES	55
OH, HOW YOU HAUNT ME	56
SO PASSED THE MOMENT OF OUR LIVES	57
YOU ARE WHAT I CAN NEVER FIND	58
YOUR THOUGHTS	59
FOR ALL MY LIFE	60
YOUR HANDS, MY DEAR	61
THE DRESS	62
AIMS	63
TO NELLIE	64
SOLDIER'S DEATH	65
THE MORE I LIVE	66
TO-DAY	67
YOUR EYES	68
I WAKE IN WEARINESS	69
WHEN YOU COME TO ME	70
YOU ARE THE IMPOSSIBLE	71
EPILOGIA AMORI	72
CAN IT BE?	74
DISEASE	75

CONTENTS

WHAT IS THIS MONSTROUS DELIRIOUS OBSES-	AGE
SION?	76
I SAID GOOD NIGHT TO YOU	77
IN MY GARDEN	78
APHRODITE	80
SPRING	81
TO-NIGHT COMMENCES THE CITY SUMMER	82
SISTERS	83
LOOKING INTO LAKE COMO AT MIDDAY	84
SIENA IN MAY — EVENING	85
LISTEN TO ME WELL	86
AND IF	87
MISUNDERSTANDING: I.	88
II.	89
" OPINIONS "	90
THERE IS NO HAPPINESS OF CONTENTMENT IN	90
MY HEART	91
OBSESSION	92
A POEM TO POETS	94
THE BRITTLE MOUNTAIN	95
FANCIES	96
THE CITY LIFE	98
THE NORTHERN SUMMER	99
THE CLOCK STRUCK UPON THE BLUE JUNE AIR	100
" CREDO "	101

THE YOUTH AND HIS SOUL

YOUTH. It is morning, The early star-sprinkled morning; Everything drinks and bathes: The down-flying shadows of birds Are dimly visible on the faces of brooks And upon the green shimmer of the trees. I am moved with a sweet expectation. A strange half-smiling restlessness. I too will yearn towards the sun Like these flowers. And become more tall Through my love of this sky. But now does the beauty of this dawn so fill me That I long to see its reflected image In the eves of another: To join my voice To another's hymn of praise; For my whole ambition is saturated With a need of searching. Of turning over stones, of calling in valleys And listening in deep forests To the return of my echo in two keys. I must find the reason for this beating in my pulse And perceive the vision my smile broods over. I will undo the fetters of my brain And allow the fancies that pour from its brim To rush freely over my life's way

Leaping beyond all possibility In the very joy of their freedom. Ah, but I am immeshed, curtailed By this want of another. SOUL. You are not alone. YOUTH. Who is speaking to me? SOUL. I, your soul. YOUTH. I do not know your voice? SOUL. Because until now you have never needed me. YOUTH. Why do I not see you? Because I am everywhere. SOUL. Then lead me, where I wish to go. YOUTH. Where is that? SOUL. YOUTH. I want to run fast down a green hill. To skip, sing, dance and tumble, To be thrown by that which is by my side And in turn to crush it to extinction. What shall that be by your side? SOUL. YOUTH. The inversion of myself, the weakness of my pain. The tenderness of my passion, The — the acquiescence of my will. A being started from my very limitations Yet reflecting them, even as high windows give back The movements of the water over which they lean. SOUL. You ask too little.

YOUTH. How, too little?

- You want only a woman. SOUL. If these things are a woman - give me one! YOUTH. All things which are not the highest, are small Soul And therefore dangerous to ask for. YOUTH. Let us be off. I am impatient. Look about you at the nobility of these trees, Soul. The magnificence of the torrent, The mystery in those still pools; They give you what you shall not miss Until vou lose it - peace. YOUTH, Come! Come! Notice the polish of the foam bubbles, Soul. The glisten of the leaves, the coolness in the grass; You are one with it now, The expression of its master-piece - Purity. YOUTH. I am only praying for charm. Listen to the beating of your heart, Soul. To the throbbing of your blood; Look at the divinity of your limbs. They are sculptured from the spirit of health herself. YOUTH. But I am wanting for strength, The strength of seven bears To approach this woman with. And afterwards your excuse will be Soul. That you haven't heard me. YOUTH. Come, come with me.
- Soul. It is through me only that you shall find her

And because of me, your soul, That you shall suffer in knowing her. YOUTH. Ah, it is too hot for riddles, The earth herself has become pale and sick With a disease of flowers. See, they are choking her distress with kisses. Come, let us go. Soul. Go, then. YOUTH. I hear music. Soul. For you now music shall lose all its sadness And preserve merely its charm; All words - good, bad, absurd and possible, All will promise joy only to you, And only common sense shall become,- a mere word. YOUTH. What you say Blows like a draught through the sunshine, I hear your words Without being sensible of them. Youth! Youth! how preposterously brave you SOUL. are For you do not know the values - in fear. YOUTH. The music is nearer, and in it I hear The dancing of slender bodies under light veils. Ah, I must join in this bewilderment And toss the confusion that I feel With my own hands, --- over my head!

Soul. I have drawn aside my hope for you — walk down.

6

THE RETURN OF YOUTH AND HIS SOUL

Youth. Ah, those loud-tongued black-hued fountains of despair,

How they gush over me and torture me

With the prickle of their drops!

My soul, where art thou?

But O, I forget on that night so clouded with caprice The moon herself turned white;

I drew aside the last thin curtain of my reserve Entering those speckled halls

Where whims spring from the end of fancies,-

Fancies drugged from the very ashes of their decency;

Where fantasy becomes the tool of so grotesque a scheme

That violence herself slinks off affrighted.

Then did my soul sway like an ended candle

Sinking backwards

Into the shadows behind my footsteps,

While I - rushed forward

Into a strange whimpering sound of music

And saw the ends of sin, and folly

United to their partners, insanity, decay;

Then afterwards thru an odd and all embracing nausea

I tumbled hard upon the earth,

Clung to its roots and quavered at the moon.

So now I wander over frozen ground

That beats my feet less cruelly

Than some screw above my heart,

7

With all of beauty turned mirage, And only hardship anchored. My soul, I am frantic with the need of nursing you. Return to me as a cut vine does To the bramble it embraces.-And I will feed you With the weeds of my disenchantments and my regrets, That blossom over the vacancy My sins have created, As smoke broods over the village Its flame has destroyed. SOUL. I hear your words through the blurred wounds Your actions have dealt me. YOUTH. My soul. I need you far more than life itself. Promise me only That you will join me after my death, And I will drink of its breathlessness With joy. Soula When youth prefers me to life, When life becomes far heavier to bear than death, And death turns a bridge for a meeting, Then may I raise my head and pursue once more My end, progression! YOUTH. You will come? Soul. I am within you. The spring of your tears, the color of your joys,

The nobility of your victories, the reason for your being.

Walk on; your road has won its evenness from Pain.

Youth. O life! the beauty of your peace

Is immortality.

I

THE pain of this summer mood, O, The beauty of these too full roses, And these sounds of a well satisfied nature! How keenly she throws the looseness of her night caprices And the languor of her mornings at my starving heart! Over the garden wall I hear the noises of her harlotry, And into the garden steals the incense of her freedom Together with the broad laugh of her abandon; So that I move slowly overcome with desire, Longing for the passion that hesitates in its strength And departs at its zenith: Longing also to dream something That is within my reach to have, And to have that which my dreams cannot exhaust. Over the garden wall I hear the noise of her harlotry And the heavy steps of her pleasures. I long to join in her convulsive pastime, But my soul forbids.

10

My soul is a well of moods — Heavy and still from the accumulation Of its suppressions; My soul is a well that prays for a stone To disturb its tranquillity And torture its depths. My soul longs to be broken into freedom, Even as a rock cuts the lethargy Of old water into which it falls; So does my soul desire to be mastered By the sweeping strength of a hard rebellion, Finding its paradise amongst those regrets Of very beautiful strange transgressions!

III

REBELLION

Only that I am sad with an ache That may not burn itself away in temper, Only because I see too clearly the fruits Of a distasteful obedience, suppression, delusion, And am keenly sensible to a soul pity Which eats away in a moment The superficial comfort my optimism has grown! For even as hot-house flowers expire at the touch of a weed. So is all my artifice washed naked with a tear, And through one sigh my heart is blown To the feet of truth — the truth of me Who am a garbled heroine Of wandered nights and sleep-sick noons, Of music fantasy and rhythmic madness, Of self-denial bordered to indulgence, And fasts that make a feast of neither food nor wine.-A one of long looks and deep findings, Of low voice heavy with timidity and lips backward From the intensity of the kiss they hold. For my feet as well as my soul Are bleeding from the ice on this easy way, And "everything on earth" is crushing me

Into the "nothing" On which it rests most easily.— Such is the song of my rebellion, The vainness of my regrets, The sadness of my depression.

IV

What is heavier than my soul at this moment, Undisturbed by a single tremor, Unrelieved by a single purpose, Tranquil almost to unconsciousness? How I envy the pool's unrest Broken with the gestures of fish, The air's currents Agitated with a thousand sounds, And the earth herself Shattered by the evening wind! Ah, what is heavier than my soul at this moment, Undisturbed by a single tremor, Unrelieved by a single purpose, Tranquil almost to unconsciousness!

A sinful mood gallops through my heart, Heating my pulses unbearably: I imagine too vividly the delights Of what I do not will to do. And that is painful. My fancies paint strange pictures Upon the floor of my imagination, So that my feet are steeped In what my hands decline. My body is far more high than my brain In this moment. Holding itself aloof from the rayages Of twin exhausters, soul and mind. I long and long for the control of my soul. Would that I could do with it What I can with my body! For my soul has looked through the great emptiness Of every, every star-locked door, And has even persuaded the musicians to play Upon the strange forbidden string. My soul is thin and sharp as the wind, But powerful as the sweetness Of all south air. I long and long for the control of my soul. Would that I could do with it What I can with my body!

I am bewildered to the bottom of my thought,

For nothing continues to be the same as the beginning,

The beautiful beginning for which I paid with vows,

- Upon the understanding that it would always be the same.
- So I have shaken my conscience to the very core of its being,

Since my conscience tried to make me accept life

With a series of make-shifts,

Whispering to my senses that it was possible for them to live

Beneath questions and above facts,

Attempting even the seduction of my soul;

Therefore have I bruised my conscience into insignificance,

Placing my soul over the cry of my heart and the excuse of my head.

But still I am bewildered, shaken to the bottom of my thought,

For nothing continues to be the same as the beginning, The beautiful beginning for which I paid with yows,

Upon the understanding that it would always be the same.

VII

ENDING

Into my soul has crept a strange invulnerable ending. As sleep creeps upon fatigue So has this ending stolen upon my soul, And like water slowly filling into a void Has gradually dulled all burning and aching, With the chill evenness of finality: Rising also up towards my pulses. My uneven seried pulses. Calming the fluttering of their nerves With a comfort of unconsciousness. Easing the pain of their insight With a conception of the infinite. Curing all by ending - all, So that I am under the sea But not oppressed by its weight, Aware of its lessons Yet unsurprised by its solution. Therefore my soul is also at peace with my hands, For like quarrelling children who sleep suddenly In the very midst of a dispute, So have my soul and hand joined minds, Through the common fate of this ending, This strange invulnerable ending, That has stolen upon my being like sleep upon fatigue.

VIII

My soul longs to be stirred. To be desperately stirred, Not by love with its swollen-eved timidity And damp nervous hands, Nor by hatred with its storm-tossed mole-hills And its nasty expressions, Nor yet by fame with its absurd orchestra Of ill-tuned trumpets; But by something Doric, Seen far above me Through a line of cypress in a mirage of sapphire, With crest of beauty on the wave of fever: Something hard and exquisite Regal and destructive. Where my soul could dance With infinite madness On its mirrored repressions, Till all vision Wavered intensely In the violent arms Of a consummate relief.

\mathbf{IX}

THE SPIRIT OF LOVE

I am the spirit of love. The sister of every great sacrifice, And I play with a golden harp Strung upon the pulses of all triumphant sorrow. I play to those hearts heavy With the burden of growing love, And to those stretching hands that are faint From an attitude of deep giving; I play to the sigh in the heart of man, To the eye that follows a cloud; And my music catches the sweet overflow Of all generously weeping souls, Turning their glorious weakness On the shuddering scales of a rare strain To chisel their tears with immortal gold: For the sadness of love is a golden grief, The tears of love are gems among angels, The joy of love is sun upon God; And I am the spirit of love, The sister of every great sacrifice, And I play with a golden harp Strung upon the pulses of all triumphant sorrow.

х

THE SPIRIT OF LONELINESS

I am the spirit of tense loneliness. The brother of a white controlling truth; And my feet are upon the wind at nightfall. Lending to it all of ineffable sadness; It is again my fingers that play through twilight In the moving mass of figured clouds. Extinguishing the beams of the dying sun With the mauve wand of deep silence: Also I am in the receding tide And among the shadows of great trees. I live upon the sigh in the souls of men And the wistful pravers in the dreams of women; My only charity is compassion of the Infinite So driven by that which it rashly drives: My one stern faith is the ultimate silence That shall fall upon the pulses of the spirit itself; My soul-taught love is for the ghost of fancy Which has never pretended once to be real; And my only hope is to cease asking For hope and all her bed-ridden deceits. For I am the spirit of tense loneliness; The brother of a white controlling truth; And my feet are upon the wind of nightfall

Lending to it all of ineffable sadness, And it is again my fingers that play through twilight In the moving mass of figured clouds, Extinguishing the beams of the dying sun With the mauve wand of deep silence.

XI

THE SPIRIT OF SOUL

I am the spirit of the soul, The shining tear upon the robe of infinite desire; It is my nerves that lend to the soul Those wings for her dreams: My hands that take her briefly Through the muddy noise of strident life: My pulses that stir her blood With the urgent spirit of sharp enthusiasm: For I am the blush upon the white rose Of her strange understanding: The thrill that relieves the mastering beauty Of her rare passion: And the power that blows her Into the sky where she sits among the gods, Defying all the schemes of life To tarnish one star upon the glorious cloak Of her incomparable beauty: I am indeed the spirit of the soul. The shining tear upon the robe of infinite desire, And it is my nerves that lend to the soul Those wings for all of her dreams.

XII

My heart is full of twilight loneliness, It is the hour of regrets My soul is full of untaken tenderness, It is the moment of repose. My mind is full of unanswered questions, And my fancy is asleep beneath a brim of peace. My sadness has ceased weeping, Since its presence is inevitable. The hands of my spirit are folded Beneath the flutter of my hopes. The lamps of my pulses are shaded With the sound of my tears; For my heart is full of twilight loneliness; It is the hour of regrets.

\mathbf{XIII}

Have you ever waited In desperate loneliness, And utter depression For the breaking of daylight, Attending all weary A ragged procession Of memory's hours, Bespattered with tears; Then opened your window Out wide toward the morning, Exultantly breathing The vainness of hope?

XIV

It is a strange thing to be young, Yet always lonely; To be filled with the spirit of the dance And the essence of dreaming, Yet always lonely. It is odd to be continually surrounded Without any companionship, And finally thru isolation, To sneer thinly At all that one loves It is strange to be young, Young and lonely, To tear away the earth at night From the colored forms Of buried treasure: The glittering treasure Of midnight reverie And illustrated dreams, Yet to finger their gloss With solitary hands. So -- life becomes bitter. Sleep cowardly; The dance falters. And the smoke - dies.

XV

" CONCESSION "

Over me are creeping clouds, The very blackest clouds. The giant, chaotic clouds Of infinite concession. I look into the future And see the years spinning away from me Like tops, upon a slanting floor of glass; Then I look backwards In terror into my soul. And find it living in the crumpled tent Of a passing mirage: When all my nerves cry out, great God! Why have you given eyes to witness such futility, Ears, but to be broken by these sounds Lips, only to strain and mutter with a curse inadequate? O! to what end this undemanded gift of life! And strange answers roll Beyond the brink of my understanding; Chasms made of sneering bones Open to invite my stumble, Values fly upside-down Over my head, Laughing in a witless spite;

And thru the sterile air I hear the cavilings of my soul In all the mighty grip Of a Titanic fear. Yes! over me are creeping clouds, The very blackest clouds, The giant, chaotic clouds Of infinite concession.

XVI

SUICIDE

Thus spoke I to my soul And shivered from so speaking. Behold! Here is the great temptation With incense for thy hungry nostrils, Colors to paint upon thy scratchy heart, And a fast of wine for thy feasts of water. Take this idea With a suave promptness, Even as a lover fingers The will of his mistress; Drink deeply Of this impossible thing. With thy hands freezing From a dancing of nerves: With quickening pulses That shall touch expiration Thru a thrall of sinking: Then shalt thou place merely at thy will Sea-deep rocks very much higher Than sky-blown clouds, Judging the destiny Of fighting stars, Plaving also Among those motives

That threaten space With the massive invasions Of infinite life. Thus spoke I to my soul And shivered from so speaking. Behold, here is the great temptation With incense for thy hungry nostrils, Colors to paint upon thy scratchy heart, And a fast of wine for thy feasts of water.

XVII

RUN INTO THE FIELDS WITH ME

Run into the fields with me, The grey windy fields of complete freedom; And as you pass the well, Throw into it all your material inheritance! Do not regret the hot sun, But learn to warm yourself in the wind. Neither must you languish after companions, For your solitude will teach you to find out someone. Run into the fields with me, The grey windy fields of complete freedom.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO HAVE LIVED?

WHAT does it mean to have lived? — To have cried At the pain of our lot! What does it mean to have loved? To have sighed For the things that are not! What does it mean to have wrought some glow For the gods to inhale? Only the aching of thought With woe That is silent and pale. So if in this summing of mine The only adventure is death,

Let us walk thru the sea towards the line That chokes and dissevers the breath, To greet the adventure — of Death.

A WOMAN PASSED ME

A WOMAN passed me in the street With red-heeled shoes on tiny feet, And face that through a mist of paint Shone helpless small and almost faint. The silken tightness of her gown Caused me to smile and then to frown. That so much beauty should so bare Its richness, in such foul night air. I watched her grace in full delight. Glad in the dark to find such light; I framed some word to say to her (Forgotten slang came back to slur The strange white meaning of my mind) Towards this sweet plaything of mankind. Then clearly spoke a childish voice. I listened, for I had no choice: "Come on, why do you wait?" it said (My heart seemed struck with heated lead).

"They never wait," I heard her say, In tones with which the angels pray, "They take and kiss and so pass by." She ceased and then I heard her sigh. "So come and take what's left, look sharp " (Her voice straved like a broken harp) And quivered down to meet her tears: A silence, while my soul grew years. " Is there not something else," I cried, "To do for you - to find your pride?" A stillness, then she laughed ---" For this" (Her fingers pattered like a kiss Over the covers of her form) "There is no day after the storm, The other thing has crossed the ford. This soul's been serving years --- its Lord!"

TO DEATH

COME and take what's left Of what your brother gave, Come and play the pipe That tunes me to the grave. Try to find a sign Of what your brother left; Seek among the rags And disinter my theft! Try to find a shade Of what was there at first: Discover just a drop That has not fed my thirst! Search well among those rooms Where deeper things are kept; You'll surely find the mark Of where my spirit slept, While body drank of flame, Enchanted with its shame. Where words were light as air, And foulness became fair! But just before we start, Uncover all your head And let me see the aim -For which my spirit bled.

IT IS A GLORIOUS MOMENT

I^T is a glorious moment when we throw away The inherited bread, with its smug butter Churned thru centuries in the mould of fear;

It is a great day when we cast aside The fire on the hearth, for the flame in the soul, And throw off comfort, to sleep in peace;

It is a splendid thing to widen the sky With our hope's breadth, and to suck darkness With the rare appetite for real night.

And yet how sad are all great things, Sobering, remote as the tops of mountains, But pure and vivid as all clear air.

WEARINESS

WEARINESS from naught! Therein the germ can lie, That makes our serried will All eagerness to die; That breaks our serried will Upon the block of hate, Beneath a chanting air Whose motif whines — Too Late, Beneath a ranting air Whose motif screams — Undone, Before I even was — And Christ! — the race is run.

GRIEF

A ND as some ship afloat upon the sea Of stagnant tides goes sliding, sliding on; To wonder when the wind will lift her sail Or if the sun will ever shine again, So our poor souls go floating, gliding on Upon the glacial waters of despair, With hopeless gestures indicate of hope, To swell the fatal wreckage of the sea.

JANUARY MORNING

I

H^{OW} grey the city day! How heavy with despair, The very hush of wind Is imminent with care. O! how my spirit fits The pressure of this sigh And groans beneath a wish To vacillate and die!

Π

A morning when 'tis dull to live, And still more dull to die; A morning when 'tis sad to laugh And more sad still to cry; A morning that is grey with mist And heavy with the rain, As if the air were drenched in tears Upon a wind of pain.

DESPAIR

O GOD, let the sound of the crashing sea Or the breaking boom of the wind Outsob this cry in the heart of me, That I may not drown my mind.

That I may not drown my mind, you hear, In the seething foam of hate, Nor drink too deep of that fatal sneer In the valley called Too Late.

In that valley called Too Late, you know, Where the failures wander thick, With their archless feet thrust to and fro In the shadows that are sick.

Where the tangled hum of eternal strife Falls stiff as the shroud of death And the veined pulse of our very life Is hushed on the ice fay's breath.

Then, God, let the sound of the crashing sea Or the breaking boom of the wind Outsob this cry in the heart of me, That I may not drown my mind.

THOUGHTS AFTER AN HOUR SPENT IN A CABARET

HAVE invited you To dance. O listen to the music Swell and prance, Amidst the wattled glamour Of disease. That roars and rattles Like a can of peas. Come! come! my blonde, And hold me very tight, So that I'm sure your sense Is very faint and light; Then we will jog together Thigh to thigh, Until the floor splits And the air is high With mouldy powder And with fetid wine: Until my breath is yours, And your breath mine. Eh, listen to the music Swell and prance And - I - I have invited you To dance.

Oh, yes, I have invited you To dance. Watch their fat bodies As they swell and prance Within the rhythm Of the last decay ----Those ribald shadows Of a lost dismay! But come - the game Is broadly finished; come! And let us pinch these shadows Ere they run ---Life is a madhouse Where we roar and prance, And - I - I have invited you To dance.

SLEEP

TO forget and to be forgotten Beneath the waving grass, To wake no more and whisper Another day - alas! But just to slumber quietly Within the arms of sleep. A dreamless tearless slumber Which shadows guard and keep; Blind to the ills of living, Deaf to the wants of soul, Forgiven and forgiving Beneath our tranquil hole: All done with hopes and rancors. Farther down than they, In sleep the sleep unbroken With lashes closed for ave, Forgetting and forgotten Beneath the waving grass, No more to wake and whisper Another day - alas.

NEW YORK - ETCHED

THE echo of iron! the drilling of steel! And from far underneath a din and a clatter, Man's retching and strain over gain and its matter. Far down in the street things that mingle and meet Are dust lifted papers with rushing of feet: And the ominous sounding of thousands of voices Aloft, you can't tell if it sobs or rejoices, For down in the street things that mingle and meet Are confusion of choices defving defeat, With a courage that labors unflinchingly keen For the griping of power and what it shall mean, For the griping of power and the clutching of law; Each man is a leader, and hopes to be more In those buildings that cut the sky into pieces. Strange columns of thought that each moontide increases; Whose power plays havoc with even the wind, Lighting the bay where it meets with the ocean; Showing the splendor that man has combined With the forces themselves through his work and devotion Showing the splendor that man has achieved In his fruits of rebellion from what was believed; Those fruits of rebellion that shadow the sun With a glory untrammelled and copied by none.

NEW YORK --- ETCHED

The echo of iron! the ringing of steel! Those bridges that arch for the passing of giants Joining country and city with iron alliance, Engaging the world to admire defiance; How the God of invention has spilled of his wares On these peaks of a city that builds as she cares, The mistress withal of gigantic ambition Still in her travail of mammoth fruition,-Fruition that urges to strive and to spend All worth for the joy of attaining an end. The echo of iron! the blasting of rock! It breeds up a rhythm of vast syncopations, A sound of the merging of hundreds of nations, It's the noise of a forge, the forge of the world ---Where the scheme of the future is being unfurled. Where flesh-pots are weighed in to simmer and boil From their ashes being clad the fruits of their toil. The man of the future, a little of all, Through his merit to stand by his weakness to fall, The mouthpiece of wisdom he has not conceived, The voice of a power that's still unrevealed, Yea! the voice of a power that shatters the sun With a glory untrammelled and measured by none.

I

WHEN dawn drew my palace in its glow, My soul cried, Lift thy weariness and go — Why — whence and whither on — still not to know Only that thou shalt sleep between despair.

п

Often a lonely wanderer I Have listened to the wind pass by And through its weary tension heard My tired soul's forbidden sigh.

ш

Once through the fevered sweetness of a dream A voice called, mark these memories well that seem Merely the grotesque circlings of unrest, These are your truths without your fears between.

IV

O come, sweet friend, and let our step be slow, Regard the ocean's changing tide below, Then why to fret at such intangency, For like this water, so you come and go.

v

I drew your love across the sound of harps, Strung on a tear of melting winter foam, That washed my soul in radiant ecstasy, So may a moment write a finished poem.

VI

If thou wouldst really live Make tragedy the outpost for thy wit And laughter the great basis for thy tears, Thus shalt thou truly victimize the years.

VII

Ah, love, this growing old is very sore To us who watch the change with youthful souls And hearts that beat as madly as before For findings we may seek — through — never more.

VIII

Here is the depth of wisdom, and the star Of beauty placed together in a jar, Select O youth a symmetry of grace And leave the rest to learn what circles are.

\mathbf{IX}

Into my hand I drew you as the ground Draws rain from heaven through its vast suspire, Just so I warmed your innocence with sound, Who fell — but from the need of my desire.

Х

Ah, love, good-bye at dawning is a word We lovers well may designate absurd, Yet final words while still the senses sing Leave free a song that man has rarely heard.

\mathbf{XI}

Last night a sail upon the sea went by Dressed in the far-off moonlight of the sky; Poor sail made lonely from a light so high, And lonely light alone to shine and sigh.

$\mathbf{X}\mathbf{H}$

Some shout after a love in wild dismay Whose tape extinguished spark has flown its way, While yonder group with folded eyes adorn Their passive souls eternal neither way.

XIII

O come, my soul has lived a thousand nights Within a moment's dream of you, beloved, So let us build this hour of delights And give our wrongs the title of our rights.

XIV

We lived the splendid golden moment, we Whose eager lips had tasted many wines — We drank of love as drowned men drink the sea Then — tears absorbed your face away from me.

XV

Life is a piece of sophistry, my dear, Played upon the tangled flutes of fear, Death the splendid folk-song of contempt That soars above the jangle life has meant.

XVI

Ah! was it wrong that for a moment we Tied fast our fears — so that our souls might see Their true life — rights aflame beneath our eyes That asked and gave — all that shall never be.

XVII

THE CITY BLOCK

Ten cents to eat, ten cents to drink, Ten cents to laugh, ten cents to cry; Ten cents to dance, ten cents to think — Ten cents to think — then ten to die.

HUITAIN

I

S^O came the day of days, the night of nights, When my unfettered soul was free to speak Of burdened wishes, and incarnate rights To plume its wings for the forbidden flights — Then did I turn to listen for the breath Of garnered gifts — immeasurably fair. O love! I did but listen to the air That blew around a space — where there was — death!

Π

SADNESS

Like whispers that are gone before they form, A message for the object of their will, Like shadows that are passed before they warn The subject of their tenderness, until Some strange and broken radiance of the air Suggests a heavy weightfulness of care, And life seems built with pale and broken threads; Then, sadness takes the helm within our heads.

Come, drink your way up to the river's edge, The 'cello plays too deeply to be borne, Come, crush life to the image of your soul, Let night loves shut away the sob of dawn. Who wants to see the village at the last, Or mark how ill the germ of life behaves? Better to stumble blackly on the dark, Than dving see the sun upon the wayes.

SONNET

O TRAGEDY, where is thy golden crest Or Life, thy merest possibility? Thou canst not fool me with a mess of dreams, Against the fatal effigy of truth; Thou canst not draw a sun across the moon, The pale sick moon of infinite distress, Nor fill my cup's deep space with druggèd wine Against the total bitterness of truth.

"I was" shouts loudly down upon "I am," I am, the son of murdered memories A dancer on a veilèd undertow, Whose current sings "Be on your way to naught." O Tragedy, where is thy golden crest, Or Life, thy merest possibility!

GOOD NIGHT

GOOD night, my strange impassive love, good night. Dream with your dark forbidden soul of me, Until the dawn is heavy with your sighs; Then shall you find me waiting at your knee.— Then shall you find me waiting at your knee With stories for the shudder of your whim, With fancies for the hour stand's caprice And imagery, to wrap our passion in.

THOSE SINS

L ET me outlive, outlive, Those sins I found through need! Ah, Christ, forgive! forgive! My soul faints as I plead; My soul faints to implore Forgiveness for its sins, My brain dies to its core, That I may sin no more.

MADONNA OF THE EYES

WHAT curious thoughts could give, So young a head as yours Such odd and startling poise, Madonna, pale and slim?

.

And what rare acts could give Such thinness to your hands, Such slowness to your step, Madonna, without sin?

For there are things in you That measure just my depth, Madonna, of the Eyes, Give me your Truth — and Lies.

OH, HOW YOU HAUNT ME

O^H, how you haunt me through and through my days! Your eyes are like the memory of a mist That covers up the form of living things, And clouds all nature in a mystery.

My life becomes a malady of dreams, For I am sick with pondering on your being, Weak with conjectures far too strong to name, Ill from the bravery of my own despair!

SO PASSED THE MOMENT OF OUR LIVES

S^O passed the moment of our lives, Though neither of us knew That each would give his life away To pass that time anew.

A life of dreams then came to us, Built on each other's aim, Yet sad to say too late we found That they were both the same.

YOU ARE WHAT I CAN NEVER FIND

Y^{OU} are what I can never find, You play with that I dare not touch, Did I not love you over much, My tears had sought another mind.

But, love, the threshold to your door Holds music of a vaster clue Than all the other songs heard through. Your answers make me question — more.

YOUR THOUGHTS

I FEEL your thoughts are stealing back to me Away from all the jarring earth-alarms; I know your eyes are closing to recall The habits of my soul within your arms.

How will it be when consciousness departs, And Judgment seeks the truth within us two? Will Justice hold herself, for you who are More poor through me who am made rich from you? FOR all my life I'd spoken in a tongue I knew not. And my tongue The language of my land lay hidden deep Under the tangled morass of my soul, Until one day Of torpid greyness and suspense, I heard you speak My way, and answered back So loudly, but with voice you could not hear.

YOUR HANDS, MY DEAR

YOUR hands, my dear, I do so love your hands; For like thin flowers chilly with the dawn They sway and move among your draperies, Seeking to hide their pallid slenderness With modesty for such enchanting form.

бі

THE dress I wore so happily Amidst the crowded tumult of your praise, I wear again, how differently dull Alone with just the memory of those days. That charming song of yours I play again enclosed with candlelight, And how its chords inflame my loneliness With longing that burns sharply through the night. So if upon these swooning summer-nights Your sweet suspended dreams I enter not With heaven-raked allurements for our love Then, Sweetheart, I deserve to be forgot.

AIMS

TO treat full kindly all most foreign things And have no sense of value small enough To force against another's argument.

To have a faith that brothers all of faith So widely that it comprehends the joy Of meeting God throughout the city's dust.

So to live calmly, silent through the din, With organized impressions of the trend Our soul repasses towards its fairest end.

TO NELLIE

X/ITH your eyes that are never quite free from tears, And your voice that is always bright, With your hands that move like a restless bird. Winging its way in fright! With a soul that sings Of such tragic things, Through that tiny shell of yours, That one asks how long Before such a song Will break up the life it brings! Then one wonders awhile How such senses fit With your grevish threadbare life. For your song is the song of the God of Chance, With the joy gone out of it. The secrets are many your eyes propose, Sweet woman of lonely reign, And the seasons shall blow your headstone down Before man shall have guessed your fame.

SOLDIER'S DEATH

I CALLED your name, beloved mine, In blessing as I fell. I took your head between my hands, And kissed your dear lips well. I heard your voice so clear and sweet Above the shell, You stooped and murmured thus to me Above that noise of Hell.

I love you so — God hold your soul Until my soul is free, That we may bow together At His omnipotent knee. He knows my love for you is wide As all the sea — Then pray He let us go our way Together — you and me.

A silence that was vivid gold Of pure untrammeled prayer — And then a sound of rising wind Upon the clear-cut air. A sound of wind that bore a voice aloft Immensely fair — A voice that granted freedom to Those souls who really care.

THE MORE I LIVE

THE more I live, the more I fear not death But life, and the strange intimacy of 't, Those ties we forge in momentary will That last forever and beyond that time, Burning beneath the surface of our soul A sore quite depthless for it shows no mark. Then all that we have learnt to lean upon Like heaven, and the weary dread of hell Become so juggled, that at length we find A little of the other in each one.

TO-DAY

TO-DAY, spun moments on a golden loom, We two, together in an antique room Did stir the dust upon another age. And finger grace amidst an ancient gloom,-A gloom through which the organ notes arose Upon a gentle cadency of sighs -Sweet sighs with all the eulogy one knows For love — that brooding spirit of surmise. And as I gazed beneath the imagery Of Persian flowers on a painted screen. Their beauty breathed so rare a sorcery, My life ebbed to the echoes of a dream, A dream towards which I looked vaguely distressed From out the garden of a rare delight In wonder at the heavy-laden plight Of souls who lived so vainly, sorely, prest, Until your voice.- or was it mine perhaps?-Undid the silence like a sad refrain: Until your hand touched mine beyond the lapse Of memory,-I had forgot my pain.

YOUR EYES

YOUR eyes have all the Eastern subtlety Of crime, and passion's exquisite misdeeds; Beneath their tense and lazy scrutiny I sense a pool to which a fountain leads; A pool so secret and so strangely deep, That all my soul stands quivering before The mad desire to descend and sleep Beneath this pool whose current sings (no more), Beneath this pool whose current sings and sighs, Behold I am the very spool of death; O come to me all you whose spirit cries, And I will cure you with a truth for lies.

I WAKE IN WEARINESS

I WAKE in weariness And fall asleep in tears. Tell me, is this life's measure For all the future years?

For if it is, my dear, Then I will have no more Of this deep ache of mine So deep, so sad, so sore.

Then will I go to meet The dawn below the sea, And watch the bubble rise That once was breath — of me.

WHEN YOU COME TO ME

WHEN you come to me I shall lay aside my pen And put away my book For ever.

When you come to me, I shall open the window, Kissing the white sill-ice With love.

When you come to me, I shall dust the room gently Pinning roses along the wall For light.

Dressing Thru a lure of moonbeams, To the stir of roses, When you come to me! YOU ARE THE IMPOSSIBLE

YOU are the impossible, And I worship you through a veil of passion With fanatic hands.

You are the unattainable, Yet I look at you with hungry nerves And violent eyes.

You are the inevitable,

Yet I gaze upon you with strange terrors And odd submission!

> For you are the dancing Of my singing pulses, And the fragrant sob Of my very beautiful despair.

O you are the impossible, And I worship you through a veil of passion With fanatic hands.

EPILOGIA AMORI

I^T comes with rushing worship, And leaves in blinding pain Like the tossing wind of Autumn With its breakage after rain, Like the dancing wind of Autumn With its cry more sad than sane.

It comes with strangest tension, Remains in sharpest woe, Like a violin's suspension On some note profound and low, Like an agonized suspension On a violin's taut bow.

But, ah, how it enchants us With its golden puissant gloom, Its blood-stained threads that wind us Through its mad immortal loom, Those blood-stained threads that bind us In a strange fantastic room.

And who of us would change it For the calm of deep dead seas, Or sacrifice its madness For the peace of prayerful knees, Or capitize its sweetness For the calm of deep dead seas.

EPILOGIA AMORI

So we'll not stay regretting Those dreams we could not live Nor grudge the pain of letting Our heart's blood thru a sieve, Nor curse the shame of setting Our soul where naught could live.

For we are buds of grieving On the flower of despair, And we forge our way believing That life is fine and fair; Yes, we forge our way believing, And clutch the pale thin air.

CAN IT BE?

C AN it be that I shall love you like this, And never know you? Can life possibly continue to exist Amidst such frustration? For surely your dreams are blocked with the stuttering Of my inept expressions. And when you passed me, have you not felt the tension Of my leaning soul? Then surely you must have seen the restless daze Of my unsteady eyes. O can it be that I shall love you like this And never know you?

DISEASE

We rebellious seekers into the meaning of motives;
Like divers in a pearl fishery
Who sink deeply after sick oysters,
Bringing up the result of their labor —
A diseased product — the priceless pearl.
So we sink profoundly down
Amidst the awe of real findings —
Down into the sick nerves
To the keen pulse of thoughtful men,
Knowing we may catch there
Among those strange sensitive depths
The one treasure — a great brain —
Finding out again that disease is priceless.

WHAT IS THIS MONSTROUS DELIRIOUS OBSESSION?

X7HAT is this monstrous delirious obsession — This lead-colored, jade-fluted craving That bothers my pulses with a twitching pain? Is it your lips I want or the worship of your soul? Do I crave to watch the slow unfolding of myself Upon those strange mosaics of your untutored senses? Or do I want you! you! to cover my contempts ----With the deep blurring of abandon: For your voice bruises against the tenor of my thoughts With a consuming sound, Your eves exasperate the pleasure among my dreams And your lips - but I cannot think of them And hold my sanity. What is this monstrous delirious obsession, This lead-colored, jade-fluted craving That bothers my pulses with a twitching pain?

I SAID GOOD NIGHT TO YOU

I SAID good night to you — and walked away, But I felt like turning, with mad sharpness, My eyes' wish on to your eyes, So finding out What you really were meaning. I said good night to you and walked away, But I felt like holding you up abruptly Towards my lips to see if your lips Would tremble and open against the scorch Of my intense breathless flaming. I said good night to you — and walked away, But I felt like bruising your flesh with mine, Like twisting your lips with odd agonies, Like moving your soul towards strange abandons; Yet I said good night to you — and walked away.

I SAT in my garden That is bounded by a marble snake, And flanked by purple cypresses With vellow fruits weighting them down. I sat in my garden Where the flower-beds are filled With colored waters where one bloom Floats strangely. I sat in my garden, Bathing my soul in deep silence, And noticed the unsteady walking Of a sleepy dove. The night grew profound and more profound, Yet I watched its trade with unwinking eyes, Seeing well the great shallowness From where I sat, aloof in my garden. I looked up once for diversion And saw in the starlight a vague pageant Of men's emotions floating gently Down, down towards my garden; Threading them through these varied emotions, Like a string from which the beads dangle. Were the tears of life - a blue fire Running the gamut of every nerve. Around them spun the futilities of life, Vainly, wildly trying to pierce Their dark truth for an ephemeral instant;

Like fire-flies they were thinking to destroy A great night with a little flame. Then did I see the hopes of men Flying like swallows across the moon And I heard their balance Destroyed in space. Then also came the loves of men Sprawling all over the paths in my garden. Playing like kittens with a worsted ball, Stumbling, rolling head over heels, Yet righting themselves — with a frantic eve. Then did I see the thoughts of men Play like lightning over my garden. Burning its depths with a sullen glare -A strange complete ominous glimpsing Of all that which has no day. The night grew profound and more profound. Yet I watched its trade with unwinking eves. Seeing well the great shallowness From where I sat, aloof in my garden.

APHRODITE

APHRODITE! The columns of your temple Are the beams of my heart; Your colored pavements The flowers of my passions: Your leaping roof, The very dome above my soul! I breathe towards you In the warm still nights, Thru the playing fingers of Eros Who is jealous of my desire for you, For you, Aphrodite! Who possess the strange abandon of the last flower, And the challenge for all over-ardent seekers In your death-colored eyes. Listen to my worship As you listen to those flowers That riotously break their buds against the wind. Smiling at the rash charm Of so vain a sense -A sense that dares to hope It may inflame you From the powder of its sparkling charge,-You, O Aphrodite. Whose soul shines thru the marble Of your high contempt Like some far light with all the sea between.

SPRING

S PRING full of virile curiosities For strange unsteady visions, Paved with petals Of invisible blossoms, Filled with the sobbing Of an untried bow. Eagerness and fright, Fright and weakness, Stirring together the sweets of our soul, Brewing sharp pains And soft indecisions, Urging disclosure Of what we subdue.

TO-NIGHT COMMENCES THE CITY SUMMER

TO-NIGHT commences the city summer, A pedestaled labyrinth of yellow lights Tossing their shadows upon dark pavements. A mixed myriad of yearning music sounds, Addressed to later possibilities, And uneven voices All in the singular rhythm of passion. The night air is both light and heavy With laugh and desire, Both fresh and stale With changing comprehensions, Both wrong and right Through the contours of heritage. All the windows are wide And souls are touching the earth, Mingling their needs, suffering their pleasures, Digging their contempts -For to-night commences the city summer.

SISTERS

LIVE in the North, The strange contracted North,
Filled always with the ecstasies of suppression.
I dream through fogs
Among an even consonance of shadows,
Where no one dares look upon the path they follow.
My song rolls backwards,
Pressing sharply into pleading nerves
Straining my soul almost to extinction.
I live in the South,
The languid sun-crowded South,
Full of passionate loose-lipped laziness.
I'm all of my wish,

Therefore my sleep is vacant of dreams,

And my waking uncovered with blushes.

There are no thoughts

At the bottom of my soul.

For my soul is a fountain - at which every one drinks.

LOOKING INTO LAKE COMO AT MIDDAY

SUPERLATIVE essence Of every soft color Mixed in with the water And shadows of boats. Ignorant laughter, Almost a singing, From people who guess not The scent of their sight.

SIENA IN MAY - EVENING

MASSES of memories, Riotous colorings, Circling byways, All violently grand. Smells of the night,— Spring Oppressed with decaying. The past and the future Both linked in a mood. L ISTEN to me well, for you shall never hear me, My soul is emaciated from my longing for you, My heart is pale with the monotony of longing, My nerves scared from the clutching of fancy, And my hands thin, thin from clasping a dream — Have you never heard me beneath my silence Fighting through the waves of my passion for you, Clasping at the straws of my control with terror Lest the tide destroy your ignorance, love! Ah, listen to me well, for you shall never hear me.

ND if —— To-morrow in this vastly deep Trough of the sea, I sink to find my sleep Beneath some mammoth hemorrhage of waves, I who have sought the kiss that spirit craves Choked under, by a thunder-pressing feast Of water, I who sought so for the wine To make my blood sing, as my spirit fleeced The truth, from Life's impediment of grime!

> Think not of me as one who bade farewell In sadness or with the most least regret, For I have suffered more than death could tell Of pain, at the poor way which life is set. So let no love for me weep at the name Of one whose soul from life was growing lame.

I

YOU stood before me like a flower Oppressed by the moon. Your lips moved faintly, Yet I heard no sound; Your eyes were obscurely raised To some shrine among your dreams, And your hands were prest severely Against one another. I wanted to call, to rend your dreams To crush your hands, to kiss your eyes. Somewhere a clock chimed, A rose fell from a crowded vase,— Then hope fled suddenly And I — I went away.

. .

.

MISUNDERSTANDING

Π

The door closed; we were left alone, And a tempest froze my heart Into uneasy silence. A sun melted my bounding words To insignificance; A mad light blinded me With awkward fevers; What could I say to you Whose tongue was caught In such a net of flame? How touch you Whose hands were stuttering Under a new and terrible weight? How hold you — I a conquered nothing! The door closed — and I was left alone.

" OPINIONS "

A^{MAN} once said to me, "I could have been great, Had I not been ground in the mill of details, Gushed over by the spittle of meanness Until my frantic soul hemorrhaged its dreams Into the waste heap of total concession, Dying in an agony of unclean air!"

A woman once said to me, "I could have been good, Had my flesh been unbartered till my mind was ripe, If I had not promised what I did not know; I could have faced the calamity of changing convictions Ascribing to nature that which is natural, Instead of cursing my bed and dreading my dreams."

A child once said to me: "What fun to leap And dance on the sun-beams That cover the ocean in a crash of gold, Thinking of nothing but the joy of pushing Through the bright sun-water, up to the sky."

THERE IS NO HAPPINESS OF CONTENT-MENT IN MY HEART

THERE is no happiness of contentment in my heart, And I laugh Only because tragedy is beautiful; Neither do I cry because life is sad, But only because misery is ugly; And again I do not live at all because life is possible But merely because dreams are true. O there is no happiness of contentment in my heart, And I laugh Because tragedy is so beautiful.

OBSESSION

OFTEN said to myself, What is an obsession? And my soul shook its head in negative comfort, Knowing that it had none. But I still wondered What is an obsession. What can it be like to have one Tugging at one's pulses? Then one day. Like the siren on an ambulance Which sounds its warning and arrives Almost simultaneously, It came rushing, Tearing into my life With a crushing gasping strength. It seemed to me first To have the eyes of Life, Then I saw It had the pallor of Death, Then all I felt Was a terrible torture. And doors closed With a loud banging Upon those corridors I had walked through freely In all the contentment Of huge ignorance.

OBSESSION

And I was left Alone with this thing, In a heavy nightmare Of tangled drumming, Leaning against A crooked mirror Of frightful, frightful mad reflections. It was then I saw Almost extinguishing My life thru gazing, The frantic eyes Of a Consummate Obsession.

W^E are an unhappy lot, We guessers after the infinite, And we run naked amuck through the halls of truth Bleeding like pigs from the pricks of real experience; Iolting roughly against recognized mysteries With incredulous shoulders: Running our fingers into the sky To sample its virtue: Digging under wells to water our souls: Investigating even the air With the scepticism of curiosity. No wonder our grace has gone Into the abyss with our rhyme, And we can no longer conceal The wounds of our vast perceptions With any bandage of irony, Or carry off our great tears On the sand-bar of wit. For we are sea-divers. Not fountain bathers, And we bring up blood not coral; Still (and here's the saddest) Wondering which is the best. For we are an unhappy lot, We guessers after the infinite. And we run naked amuck through the halls of truth, Bleeding like pigs from the pricks of real experience. Q4

THE BRITTLE MOUNTAIN

AM climbing alone on a brittle mountain And below are the rabble singing rag time; If I fall my bones will die fighting Amidst their wretched rabbits' runs: But if I get to the top of the mountain — (It's only brittle going up) My soul shall love the things surpassed With clear, even, passionless loving; Then shall I cry to the whirling clouds: Behold, behold, I no longer hate The slippery ice of the rabble's friendship, Or the masked heat of their mauling passion; For I have found the massive road, The road that leads beyond myself. Where crooked fingers can't touch me Or nasal voices rasp my balance With cavilling praise for all unripeness; And I have found the great loss, The loss of self, oh, pomp-struck rabble! So that I love you, truly I do For the vawning ditches you've made me jump. Yet - here I am still on this brittle mountain And below.— are the rabble singing rag time.

FANCIES

X7HAT monumental fancies have sat swinging Upon the crowbars of my conventional existence. Tossing roses upon stones, And attempting to demolish the law with grace. So have my fancies sat swinging Upon the limitations of my inheritance, Singing of truth into the ravenous teeth of hypocrisy, Calling aloud to me -To me a heap of worn-out languors, To join them and fly up into the naked air And on, up to the pallid gates of the giddy moon; There to walk thru forests of cypress, To a pale temple of thin columns Where the nerves are worshipped And the soul unstrung. O if my feet were as strong as my will How I would have hurt the air in my rush Towards these bright sinister cravings With their broad suggestions and their singing prophecies. But my feet, my feet are sick from bathing In the depthless abyss of tense suppression, And they can no longer carry me into those fields Where freedom ruffles the hair of the wind. Where love heats the rays of the sun With hot strange enigmatical fingers.

96

FANCIES

Ah! what monumental paramount fancies have sat opposite gaily swinging

Upon the crowbars of my conventional existence.

THE CITY LIFE

THE city life moves sharply along Upon its pivot of noise and nervousness With the staccato tread of marked effeteness Amidst the glamour of transitory expression; Its air smote with the ugly dust Of ambition's momentary flights, Its sky-line appalled through the uneven yearning Of all men for a little nothing, Its pavement hard from the trampled hate Of all more than weary walking, Its whole atmosphere stale with the scent Of passing farce and vapid ending — So does the city life move sharply along Upon its pivot of noise and nervousness With the staccato tread of marked effeteness Amidst the glamour of transitory expression.

98

THE NORTHERN SUMMER

O H, the deep green of this Northern summer How it flatters my soul with evasive dreaming, Touching my wisdom, my winter wisdom With the hot dancing feet of abandon, Calling to me, to my arid pulses, To beat again thru this mass of blossoms, To sigh once more in the lure of moonlight, To race again with the hounds of joy; And its voice steals up like broken music To where I stand, with my faded passions, To where I stand, with my stifled visions, Looking through tears at the summer valley, At the deep sweet green of the Northern summer That flatters my soul with evasive dreaming.

THE CLOCK STRUCK UPON THE BLUE JUNE AIR

THE clock struck upon the blue June air And I gazed deeply at an orchid in my buttonhole,

At the deep mauve of a blue-veined orchid While the clock struck upon the blue June air. Then suddenly thru an intense silence, The hot silence of summer mid-day My eyes flared back, and I felt profoundly The ultimate grace of cosmic Youth, I felt it crowding behind my walking, Pushing my soul thru great arenas — Towards the arc-lights of vast conception There to mate with the moving truth. The clock struck upon the blue June air And I watched the sun, the blond bright sunlight, Dancing sharply among the tree tops While the clock struck upon the blue June air.

100

" CREDO "

BELIEVE in beauty, the white burning of man's soul for the wildly incredible: I believe in truth, man's moving rebellion against the stationary fiction of moralities: I believe in love, the strange binding of our nervous ecstasies into the volume of life: I believe in hatred. the heaving discord of our creative insight beneath the back waters of satisfaction; I believe in life, that vast panting arc-light between our momentary extinctions; And I believe in death. the great wind-sheet of transitory affliction and Eternal Birth.

IOI

RETURN M	Math
1	2	3
4	5	6

ALL BOOKS MAY BE RECALLED AFTER 7 DAYS

-	DUE AS STAMPED BELOW
-
Z		×								·
LO LO	993	BERK
RAR		ALK.
NIERLIBRARY LOAN	MAR 1	OFC
2	N	NIN.
-	,	2
-
-	·
-
•				U	NIVER	SITY O	F CAL	IFORN	IA. BER	RELEY

FORM NO. DD 19

NIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY BERKELEY, CA 94720

